The King Graduate School’s Master’s in Public Health program is designed to prepare students for careers in government agencies, academia, healthcare institutions, public health interest groups, and non-profit organizations upon graduation. Public health is a diverse field that attracts professionals from various educational backgrounds who work to address complex health issues such as sexually transmitted infections, chronic diseases, environmental hazards, and substance abuse; and serve communities locally and globally to improve peoples’ health and prolong lives. Public health professionals need to collaborate with clinicians, health care agencies, and community members to identify resources that help mitigate these health issues and prevent future health problems. Students are able to tailor their degree by specializing in either Community Health or Health Administration and Leadership.

Student Testimonials

"I was working in an office job that just wasn’t for me. When I decided to go back to school, Monroe made it easy to continue work during the day while attending classes at night and on the weekend. Now I feel like I’m really doing what I’m supposed to be doing – something that I love."

-- Working Professional

"I always knew I wanted to work within the health care industry. My home country did not offer a lot of the opportunities that I knew I could find in the U.S., so I decided to pursue my degree at Monroe. The professors made my transition easy."

-- International Student

"When I first started at Monroe, I wasn’t sure about the MAP schedule because I wanted summers off. But I was able to graduate before my friends and I still had the entire month of August to spend with my friends and family."
